

LUCY L. THOMSON

Lucy Thomson is the founding principal of Livingston PLLC in Washington, D.C. She focuses her practice on legal and technology issues related to cybersecurity, global data privacy, compliance and risk management. For more than a decade she has worked on election initiatives during key U.S. elections, including addressing security problems with voting equipment.

Appointed Consumer Privacy Ombudsman in 30 major federal bankruptcy cases, she has overseen the disposition of more than 300 million electronic consumer records. A career white collar crime prosecutor at the U.S. Department of Justice, Ms. Thomson managed and conducted complex litigation in the Criminal and Civil Rights Divisions. She subsequently worked as a senior engineer at CSC, a global technology company.

A D.C. Bar leader, she was elected to two terms on the Board of Governors, and as Bar Secretary and American Bar Association (ABA) Delegate (2004-present). Active in the ABA, she served as chair of the Science & Technology Law Section and is a member of the House of Delegates and the Cybersecurity Legal Task Force. She is co-editor of an ABA book on the Internet of Things (IoT) and editor of the Data Breach and Encryption Handbook.

Ms. Thomson received a master's degree from Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute in 2001, earned the CISSP and CIPP/US certifications, and holds a J.D. degree from Georgetown Law. She was elected to membership in the American Law Institute.
