Nancy Drane is Executive Director of the District of Columbia Access to Justice Commission, where she manages the Commission's efforts to increase local resources for the District's civil legal services network, reduce barriers that prevent equal access to justice for low- and moderate-income District residents, promote greater pro bono service by local attorneys, improve planning and coordination of legal services delivery in the District, and call attention to the disparity between the community need for legal services and the resources available to meet those needs. Prior to joining the Commission, Nancy had a 13-year career at Children's Law Center (CLC), working as a staff attorney, Training Director, and Pro Bono Director. Nancy has presented both locally and nationally on a broad range of issues, including pro bono, attorney training, child welfare, cultural competency, and vicarious trauma. Nancy received her law degree, cum laude, from Loyola University Chicago School of Law, where she was a Child Law Fellow.
